Peer Teaching Report: Department of History, Semester IV, 14 May 2026

Course Name: HIS-H CC6: History of Europe (c. 1453-1650)

Module III 3.2: Renaissance Humanism

The students were asked to imagine themselves as teachers and were given the freedom to discuss about the origins and features of humanism in front of their peers. Each of the students present spoke about the topic from their own perspective thus bringing their unique insights into it. Some of them stressed on the background and origins of Italian humanism while others spoke about how the characteristics of humanism were universal and relevant across different countries and cultures. The session brought to the fore the usefulness of peer teaching as a method of teaching—learning.
