Peer Teaching by Semester I students of History Minor

On January 20 the students of History Minor Semester I participated in peer-teaching on the Stone Age in Ancient India. The topic was not given beforehand and the students were given some time to prepare and allowed to consult their notes while presenting. The students lectured on Paleolithic Age in India, Neolithic Age in India and the evolution from hunting gathering to agricultural production along with settlements. The students discussed the debate on the Neolithic Revolution and whether it can be called a revolution or not
There were a lot of discussions and the students really benefitted from the peer teaching. The students initially were wary of this as it was a surprise presentation but then they enthusiastically discussed all aspects of the different Stone Ages in India.
